What does the Self-Advocacy Movement have in common with other human rights movements, like the Civil Rights Movement and the LGBTQ+ Movement?

All three movements are lead by people who want to see EVERYONE live in a better world. And people with disabilities also did work in those movements. Self-advocacy, civil rights, and LGBTQ+ inclusion benefit everyone in the disability community.

To learn more about the connection between disability rights and other human rights movements in history, check out the paper written by Tia Nelis, Paige Bradford, and Ruthie-Marie Beckwith at the following link: